What to do when you catch a tagged fish:

Contact IDFG with this information:

- ◆ Tag number(s)
- ◆ Where the fish was caught
- ◆ Date caught
- ◆ Species
- ◆ Length of fish
- ◆ Did you keep or release the fish?
- ◆ Did the fish have two tags?
- ◆ Would you have kept the fish if it were not tagged?
- ◆ If released, was the tag removed?
- ◆ Your name, address, and phone number.
- ◆ Do you want the tag returned to you?

Anglers may keep or release the tagged fish.

If you release the fish, please write down the tag number and release the fish with the tag intact. The tag may include a reward amount; the tag must be clipped from the fish and returned to IDFG for the reward to be paid. If two tags are with the fish, both numbers are needed.

Why do we need this information?

IDFG uses tag information to manage the fishery by evaluating the harvest, survival, growth, and migration of various fish species.

Aside from taking an active role in managing the resource, anglers will receive a history of the fish, including where and when it was tagged, how long it was when it was tagged, and information on whether it had previously been caught and released.
